Become part of the open science movement

The Leibniz Institute for Psychology (ZPID) in Trier (Germany) is an internationally recognized institute for supporting psychological research and a member of the renowned Leibniz Association.

ZPID provides services supporting the entire spectrum of research needs in psychology and is guided by the values of open science. Currently, ZPID is establishing new research areas in science acceptance, meta-science, and big data in psychology.

There are opportunities for joining these efforts as a research intern, we welcome speculative applications:

Research internship (m/f/d)

Requirements:

We are looking for applicants with advanced training in psychology or a related discipline (e.g., advanced Bachelor or Master student) and a strong interest in one of our three research areas: science acceptance, psychological metascience, or big data in psychology. Experience with quantitative (e.g., experiments, data analysis with R) and/or qualitative (e.g., interviews) methods is of advantage. Very good English language skills are necessary.

The duration of the internship is negotiable, but should be at least one month full-time. The internship is not remunerated, but can be credited as a mandatory internship (e.g., in the context of your psychology degree). Internships can be combined with Bachelor or Master thesis projects.
